GOOD-BYE, BICENTENNIAL

After February 12, 2009, many Lincoln aficionados took a deep breath and secretly thought, “Thank goodness that is over.” But it was only the beginning of the many Bicentennial celebrations of Lincoln’s birth. The annual ALA banquet in Springfield on February 12, 2010, will mark the conclusion of that year. Then you may take a deep breath.

HELLO, SESQUICENTENNIAL

But take your deep breath quickly, as there is little time between the Bicentennial’s conclusion and the beginning of the five-year Sesquicentennial of Lincoln’s Presidency. On November 6, 2010, we will observe the 150th anniversary of Lincoln’s election to the Presidency and the beginning of a five-year Sesquicentennial commemoration of his Presidency.

We are pleased that our friend and former Board member Harold Holzer will be our 2010 banquet speaker. Harold is well known in the Lincoln community and is the perfect segue from the Bicentennial to the Sesquicentennial. He is one of three co-chairs of the U.S. Abraham Lincoln Bicentennial Commission and the author of the splendid recently published Lincoln President-Elect.

As we say a fond good-bye to the Bicentennial, and what a Bicentennial it has been, we look forward to the many future events that will commemorate and celebrate Lincoln’s election and ensuing Presidency.

Information on the 2010 symposium and reservations for the banquet and luncheon may be found in this issue. Please make your plans to attend these 2010 events as soon as possible.

HAROLD HOLZER
2010 BANQUET SPEAKER

Harold Holzer, Senior Vice President for External Affairs at The Metropolitan Museum of Art, serves also as co-chairman of the U. S. Abraham Lincoln Bicentennial Commission, appointed by President Clinton. He is the author, co-author, or editor of 33 books and more than 425 articles on Lincoln and the Civil War era. Among them are The Lincoln Image, The Confederate Image, The Lincoln-Douglas Debates, Lincoln as I Knew Him, Dear Mr. Lincoln: Letters to the President, Mine Eyes Have Seen the Glory: The Civil War in Art, The Lincoln Family Album, Lincoln on Democracy (co-edited with Mario Cuomo), which has been published in four languages, and Lincoln at Cooper Union: The Speech that Made Abraham Lincoln President, which won a 2005 Lincoln Prize.

Holzer has won research and writing awards from the Illinois State Historical Society, the Manuscript Society, the Civil War Round Tables of New York and Chicago, and the Lincoln Groups of New York, Peekskill, and Washington. In 2008 he was awarded the National Humanities Medal by President Bush.

His latest books are The Lincoln Anthology (2009), a Library of America collection featuring 150 years of great writers on the subject of Abraham Lincoln; In Lincoln's Hand (2009), a Library of Congress book featuring Lincoln’s original manuscripts with commentary by distinguished Americans; and Lincoln President-Elect: Abraham Lincoln and the Great Secession Winter 1860-1861 (2008), which won the Barondess/Lincoln Award and the Award of Achievement of the Lincoln Group of New York. The latter book opens with a fitting overture to the Sesquicentennial of Lincoln’s Presidency:

The cannon salvo that thundered over Springfield, Illinois, to greet the sunrise on November 6, 1860, signaled not the start of a battle, but the end of one. The bitter, raucous, and exhilarating six-month-long campaign for president of the United States was over at last. Election Day was finally dawning.

Ignited to rouse the Republican faithful to the polls that morning, the explosions were soon augmented by other “manifestations of popular feeling” designed to “enliven” the city. Crowds of boisterous partisans took up positions outside the city’s one and only polling place and began a long day devoted to outshouting each other. Providing clamorous accompaniment were bands of musicians parading through the streets aboard horse-drawn wagons, giving ear-shattering performances while waving banners like the one that proclaimed, “A Home President for Springfield.” There was little danger that Abraham Lincoln’s hometown would slumber through this decisive day of days.

Holzer and his wife, Edith, who live in Rye, New York, have two grown daughters and a grandson.
CHRISTOPHER SMITH GERMAN
GRAVE MARKER DEDICATED

The Abraham Lincoln Association has placed a grave marker at the previously unmarked grave of Lincoln photographer Christopher Smith German. On the rather chilly late afternoon of October 2, 2009, members of the Abraham Lincoln Association Board and guests gathered at Oak Ridge Cemetery in Springfield to dedicate the marker. After brief remarks by President Richard E. Hart, Dr. James M. Cornelius, Curator, Lincoln Collection, Abraham Lincoln Presidential Library, gave remarks highlighting German’s life. The dedication ended with a blessing by board member Dr. Stewart Winger. Dr. Cornelius’s remarks follow.

Good afternoon, and thank you for attending today. In the next few minutes I will attempt to give you a snapshot of the life and work of C. S. German, whose mortal remains lie here.

Yet the life of Christopher Smith German is not so well captured in a snapshot or photograph, as it could be deemed a moving picture. Wayne Temple documented his itinerant life in an article in the Illinois State Historical Society’s magazine Illinois Heritage in July 2006. German was born in Canada on Christmas Day, 1814, to a family of Loyalists, that is, British colonists who fled to Canada during the Revolution rather than live under American rule. He concealed this fact for most of his life, admitting it to a census taker only in 1880, at the age of 65. Here in Springfield in 1860, we think, he married an Irish-American woman who seems not to have been monogamous in her habits. He divorced her and then at the age of 49 married a 21-year-old woman with a young child. They went on to have five children together.

Nor was German’s professional life quite settled. Evidently he was most active in Springfield from about 1858 to 1873, between the two economic crashes of that era, when people had money for his craft, and he moved about. He seems to have had at least three different partners in a year or two, was operating two or three different studios at the same time at points during the Civil War, and may have really made his historical mark when Senate candidate Abraham Lincoln seems to have stopped in to have his photograph taken by German; that was in September 1858. More certainly, German’s name was made when he took over an existing studio on the west side of the square just in time for president-elect Abraham Lincoln to patronize him, possibly for the second time. That was in January 1861. One image exists from each of these sittings. Mr. Lincoln came back three weeks later and sat again, this time for what seems to have been two distinct poses. Nor had Lincoln’s face or self-regard been stable in that period. For he had begun to grow a beard. German was the second photographer, and apparently the only one from Springfield, to have captured the New Look Lincoln through the miracle of chemically sensitized glass, and he captured him at his most hirsute, before age and cares had taken their toll. Both men were, after all, in their different ways, artists and scientists. We do not expect them to have kept steady habits or unchanging views.

And both of them did well: photographs were popular and fairly cheap, and German must have worked hard. He bought a couple of buildings very near the Public Square during the Civil War, paying a total of $12,000. To put that figure into context, Lincoln as one of the better-paid lawyers was making something roughly around $6 to $8,000 a year in the late 1850s, and was making $25,000 a year as president.

German had a few other partners in later years, and some of his children began helping in the store at his original site, above Chatterton’s Jewelry Store, on the west side of the square. This occurred after his return to Springfield after an apparent six-year absence in the 1870s. His wife died in 1878, and he continued to work there, as well as live there, and finally die there. That was in 1896, when he was 81 years old. He was buried from the Methodist Church, and all six of his pallbearers were fellow photographers – marveling, perhaps, at how German had not succumbed to mercury poisoning at a younger age, as many in his profession did.

What kind of fame ought to attend such a man? He scrambled a bit in early life, galloped along in what Lincoln was wont to call “the race of life,” absented himself that he was out of town for a spell in the 1870s – as was the case with our friend C.S. German. Their daughter Adeline, also called Ada, is listed a couple of times, as a watchmaker at the Illinois Watch Company; so is their daughter Ida. One learns that the first name of Mrs. Riepstine was Catherine not because Jacob was out of town and thus was listed in the directory, but because the State and Federal censuses record her name. Such was the custom in directories in those days, and often today as well, for a married woman to be omitted while an unmarried adult daughter is included. Those censuses, by the way, contribute a sixth variant spelling; and when Jacob died in 1894 (a year before German did), the directory gave him a seventh spelling.

So here is what photographers have done for us: we probably have four photos of Lincoln, one of the great figures of all time, and one photo of Catherine Riepstine, who was of no interest to the recorders of city directories and minimal interest to census-takers. She was an immigrant, like German, captured on paper by someone whom German might have taught. She and her husband apparently taught their daughter well enough to work at a skilled trade, though Jacob had the barest of skills, and we do not know what skills or trade Catherine had beyond the obvious guess of ‘housekeeping.’ Her presence is vanishingly small. Yet she walked into the same door that Abraham Lincoln did, three years later, and was captured for all time in the same manner. Photography was and is a democratic pursuit, whether your sympathies be Loyalist, Tory, Whig, Democrat, or Republican.

Lincoln Collection Opens in New Fort Wayne Home

The cherished Lincoln collection formerly housed at the Lincoln Museum in Fort Wayne has a new Indiana home. The research collection is now housed at the Allen County Public Library at 900 Library Plaza, Fort Wayne Indiana. The collection includes more than 20,000 books and pamphlets, thousands of 19th-century photographs, manuscript collections, maps, Civil War diaries and letters, newspapers, and Lincoln-related documents—including about 340 written or signed by Lincoln. In addition, the extensive subject files of newspaper clippings, correspondence, and other materials comprise a trove of information available nowhere else.

The books and pamphlets in the collection have been added to the Allen County Public Library online catalog (www.acpl.info). The entire collection is now accessible for research by appointment Mondays through Fridays from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. To make an appointment or to inquire about reference services, contact Jgastineau@acpl.info or Cvanhorn@acpl.info.

Lincoln’s Critics

The 2010 ALA Symposium will feature three noted Lincoln scholars. The event will be held in the Hall of Representatives in the Old State Capitol beginning at 1:00 p.m. on February 12, 2010.

William C. Harris

William C. Harris, Professor Emeritus of History at North Carolina State University, is an award-winning scholar who has authored ten books on Civil War and Reconstruction topics. He was the recipient of the Lincoln Prize in 1998 for his book With Charity for All: Lincoln and the Restoration of the Union. He has written extensively on Lincoln and the Civil War era.

Eric H. Walther

Eric H. Walther is associate Professor of History at the University of Houston. His most recent book is William Lowndes Yancey and the Coming of the Civil War (2006), a biography of the South’s leading secessionist.

Jennifer L. Weber

Jennifer L. Weber is assistant Professor of History at the University of Kansas. She is the author of Copperheads: The Rise and Fall of Lincoln’s Opponents in the North (2006). This work on antirwar Democrats in the Civil War North, was published in 2006 by Oxford University Press.

Other titles by Harris include The Day of the Carpetbagger: Republican Reconstruction in Mississippi; William Woods Holden: Firebrand of North Carolina Politics; and Lincoln’s Last Months (awarded the Abraham Lincoln Institute Award for best book in 2004).

Dr. Walther is the author of three books and numerous articles and book reviews. The Shattering of the Union: America in the 1850s won a Choice Magazine book award in 2004. His biography of the foremost leader of secession, William Lowndes Yancey and the Coming of the Civil War, was published by the University of North Carolina Press in the spring of 2006 and has received the James Rawley Award from the Southern Historical Association and the Jefferson Davis Award from the Museum of the Confederacy.

Dr. Weber is a native Californian who received her M.A. and Ph.D. from Princeton, an M.A. from California State University, Sacramento, and a B.S. from Northwestern.

Her principal interest is the Civil War, especially the seams where political, social, and military history come together. Other fields that attract her include 19th-century America and war and society.

She is currently working on a children’s book about the battle of Gettysburg, to be published by National Geographic; a collection of essays in honor of her graduate adviser, James M. McPherson, to be published by the University of Virginia Press; and a monograph comparing conscription and its consequences in the Union and the Confederacy.
